Excerpt from Peapack Papers I cannot learn that even one heroic deed was ever performed within its boundaries, although there may have been many of them which history has omitted to chronicle. I am not aware that any mute, inglorious Milton or any Cromwell guiltless of his country s blood rests under the sod of its ancient cemetery. When Baskingridge was convulsed with the excitement at tending the capture of the vainglorious Charles Lee at Mrs. White s tavern on that frosty December morning in 1776; while Pluckemin was thrilling with wonder at the grand fete and ball given in honor of the French Alliance - a most genteel entertainment, according to the patriotic and ponderous Knox, - attended by above seventy ladies, all of the first ton in the State.
