Forgotten Books, United States, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****. Excerpt from A Plea for the Children of the Elementary and Grade Schools A suit of clothing, be it ever so cheap, is valuable to a man in proportion to the measure of comfort and happiness it affords him, and when, by reason of his physical, aesthetic or fastidious development, or by reason of its own wear and tear, it fails to serve him satisfactorily, he has no compunction in laying it aside for another which better meets his immediate need. The mere hut, which was once sufficient shelter against material enemies, is no longer a home for civilized man, his advancement along innumerable practical and artistic lines requires furnishings and trappings which his earlier condition never dreamed of. Many of the old ideas which man once held sacred, as a part of his religion, are now listed in the category of superstition. With the chains of darkness and ignorance broken, he is left free to exercise both mind and hand in studying and applying the laws of his Creator for perpetuating his own existence. In Mediaeval times the church undertook to establish a system of mental training which would prepare the clergy for their particular line of work. It was an attempt to develop knowledge from consciousness, by a course of gymnastics in formal reasoning, and any sort of observation, experiment or investigation was tabooed. A course was designed for the education of church officials, who constituted a leisure class and who, to show that they were separated from the laboring classes, instituted the custom of wearing extra long sleeves with white cuffs. At that time universal education was not even thought of, in fact such a venture could not...
